

Emma Griffiths

Emma Griffiths is an experienced music educator and arts programme coordinator with over twenty years' experience working in schools and arts organisations internationally and in the UK. She is currently the Music Partnerships Coordinator at Radley College, where she organises a wide range of collaborative music initiatives, working closely with Abingdon schools, visiting musicians and community partners to create enriching opportunities for young people. Previously, she served as the South England Project Coordinator for Art Bytes, an inter-school visual arts competition for Year 5 and Year 9 in all educational settings, supporting visual arts engagement in schools through regional partnerships, events and outreach.

Emma has previously held teaching and leadership roles in Switzerland, China, Bermuda, Australia and London, including positions as an International Baccalaureate Middle Years Programme and Diploma Programme Music Teacher, IB MYP Music Examiner, Instrumental Coordinator and Arts Events Coordinator. Her experience spans curriculum design, large-scale event management, partnership development, gifted and talented provision and the establishment of thriving instrumental programmes. She has also directed numerous ensembles, composed and arranged music for school productions and helped developed digital systems to support arts education.

Emma brings to Dr South's Primary School a deep commitment to creativity, inclusivity and community engagement. She is passionate about ensuring all children have access to high-quality educational experiences and about supporting the school's vision through her expertise in education, the arts and partnerships.
